Introduction to the Professional Organising Industry

A new industry in Australia commenced 14 years ago and now it's taking off. Find out why and who's involved. We'll also discuss what a Professional Organiser does, who are our clients and why?

How to Get Organised So You Can Organised Others

Planning before a client session is vitally important to maximise the time you spend with them. What do you need to take with you and what resources will you need to know about? We discuss presentation, etiquette, counselling techniques and ways to offer solutions for all their needs.

Confidentiality

We discuss confidentiality in this industry and why a Confidentiality Agreement is needed.

Dealing with Different Personalities

Clients come from all walks of life and therefore each will be unique in their style and behaviour. You will experience clients with a cross-section of psychological issues such as hoarders, people with poor self esteem or people who have suffered from a trauma that has held them back in making progress in their life. The majority of clients however, will be time-poor with little or no time management skills and so we'll have an in-depth look at how to deal with clients in all situations.

Identifying Clients Needs

What do you need to be aware of when first meeting with a client at their office or home? What can you see (and therefore make recommendations for) immediately?

Client Communication

How do you deal with a client who is nervous, or doesn't want to change anything – even though they've called you in to help them? Without counselling skills, or a degree in psychology there are ways to effectively communicate the solutions you offer and provide a win-win solution for you and your client every time.

Client and Session-Time Management

Managing our time as Consultants can be tricky as many issues come into play during a session. Client availability, your efficiency, productivity and ability to assess project time-frames means that you will be juggling many balls in a short space of time. We will discuss how you can make a difference quickly and effectively and at the same time promote a professional service.

How to Analyse, Assess and Prioritise what needs to be done in Any Situation

We will discuss the questions to ask at a business or home consultation, and also learn how to identify priority areas with your clients.

In-depth Office and Home Organising Skills

You will learn two 'must know' systems for organising paperwork and we'll look at paper, how to manage it, and how to assist your clients in managing the flow.

Products and Resources

Products and resources are tools to assist in the organising process and in this session you will see the latest products and solutions that are sure to add value to your Home or Office Consulting sessions.

Insurance & Safety in the Workplace

We will discuss the importance of Insurance in this industry and talk about Safety and awareness of different situations you will encounter.

PLUS!

We will take you into your role as Professional Organising Consultant with some Role-Plays so that you can experience how to deal with different personalities...a fun and insightful session!!!

Workshop Materials

You won't go away empty-handed. You'll leave this workshop with a Certificate of Attendance, a soundly researched resource book including step by step guidelines for using the information you just learned, PLUS a copy of Carol's book – "Get Organised – A Practical Guide to Organising Your Home and Office".
